Behavioural competencies

According to (Jones, 2017), behavioural competencies will look at the strengths of a person in a workplace. Companies use these competencies when hiring new candidates and also to see what the competencies are for different positions in the company.

Categories of behavioural competencies

Individual competencies:

This will refer to how you make decisions, your confidence and the ability to think critically

Interpersonal competencies:

This will look at your ability to communicate, reduce conflict and how you interact with other people

Motivational competencies:

The ability to understand how to motivate those around you

Managerial competencies:

This will include leadership skill and problem-solving

Analytical competencies:

This will include data analysis and working with data and numbers.

Top core leadership/management competencies to know

According to (WHO?), there are 4 dimensions of leading yourself.

Heart:

You can understand yourself and your emotions. This also refers to having a high level of emotional intelligence. Your heart helps you understand others and display empathy.

Soul:

‘The soul is the epicentre of morality, integrity, humility and servanthood. Leading from the soul is all about developing your character. Developing character produces qualities that cause others to have the confidence to follow you as a leader. As you pursue growth in your character, be relentless about defining and developing the qualities that you want to be true of you.’

Mind:

This is how you process information and data. This allows you to make strategic plans and critically think about what is happening around you.

Strength:

This will look at your grit and self-discipline. How likely you are to see something through and keep yourself accountable

Basic leadership and management competencies applied

1. Setting directions and goals

Be clear in what you're asking:

Follow up with communication to make sure everyone one understands their role and task. Motivation is key. Even when presenting a new project or assignment, always use the time to motivate why the project/assignment is happening and the vision for the project

SMART:

If you set a goal that you have no hope of achieving, you will only demoralize the team. Verify employee understanding to ensure that they understand the SMART goals. Always check back after the team meeting to see if everyone is clear on the tasks. If you need to clarify, do so, and verify again.

2. Giving feedback

According to (Garfinkle, 2019), there are 10 ways to provide quality feedback:

1. Be positive
Highlight the good of what the employee is doing and not only what is wrong.
 2. Focus on behaviours and not the person
Be neutral and fair with all employees. Do not use feedback as a time to bully and employee.
 3. Be specific
Be to the point so that the employee knows exactly what it is they need to do.
 4. Be timely
Don't wait for 6 months to give feedback. Have regular check-ins to ensure that you can highlight the good and the bad to help the employee improve.
 5. Make sure you're clear on why you're delivering the feedback
'Often, feedback comes from judgment and we don't want to pass it off as feedback. So, it's important to pause and think about where the feedback is coming from and how can you deliver it in a way that will be received positively.'
 6. 'Don't use judgment as a means for feedback'
Don't use a feedback session to give your personal judgement of the employee. Everything should be work-related and should have a point.
 7. Select a neutral environment
Your meeting setting is also important. Make sure to select a natural setting where you and the employee feel comfortable.
 8. Focus on two-way communication
Allow yourself to speak and also give the employee time to speak and respond to the feedback.
 9. Follow up
Set a follow-up date by when you need to see the improvement and also check up to see how the employee is doing.
 10. Focus on the quality of your feedback
'Feedback can best be received when you have the authority, credibility and trust already established in the relationship. Without these three things, it makes it more difficult to receive feedback.'

3. Reward vs. Recognition

Designing a reward program:

As stated by (Inc., 2020) there are 5 steps to take in order to design your own reward program.

1. Identify a company goal that your reward program will support.
2. Take the time to evaluate which employee performance behaviours or key performance areas will help the company to achieve the set goal.
3. Set up new key measurements that you will use to monitor the performance of employees in relation to achieving the goals of the company.
4. Select a reward for when employees reach their goals.
5. Announce the system to the employees so that everyone has a fair shot at being rewarded.

According to (Haden, 2019), here are some fun reward ideas for your team:

1. Create a competition
Use the competition to create a game and make the reward fun.
2. Gain an assistant for the week
The best employee of the week can get their own assistant to help them for a week.
3. Festival or sporting tickets
Give the employee tickets that the company pays for. The aim to give them more time to enjoy things that they are interested in.
4. Wine tasting tours
You can buy vouchers for employees to join a wine tour.
5. Adventure awaits
You can book some fun extreme sports days for employees that are interested in these activities.

Cheap rewards that companies can use:

- Add the employee in the monthly company newsletter.
- Buy mugs with the names or pictures of the employees on it.
- The company CEO can send a video or personal letter/email to the employee.
- The employee can be selected to join any project that they're interested in.
- The employee can bring a pet to the office.

How to communicate recognition of performance

That lack of recognition takes a terrible toll on morale, productivity, and ultimately the profitability of the organisation.

40% of employed Americans say they'd put more energy into their work if they were recognized more often. It is vital to understand that they didn't say rewarded, they said recognized.

(White, 2014) said that there are 5 keys to effectively communicating appreciation:

- Make the praise personal to the employee. Make sure you know them in order to make it special.
 - Know which actions and words the employee will value. The same message will not work for all employees.
 - Don't use the appreciation as a time for criticism or speak about anything else than the appreciation.

- Be honest and genuine, make sure it comes from a true place of appreciation.
- Understand the type of communication your employee values. For example, email, personal meeting or a video. There are many options to select.
